Stephen Gray is a member of Fullerton Beck's Child Victim's Act litigation group, which represents organizations and institutions that have been named in civil cases brought under New York's Child Victims Act.

Prior to being admitted to practice law, Stephen spent a year honing his litigation skills as a legal assistant with Fullerton Beck. He researched case law pertaining to general liability and construction law cases and handled many aspects of the firm's cases including drafting motions, witness affidavits, and client letters. He also analyzed deposition transcripts and drafted summary and analysis reports for supervising attorneys. Stephen also participate in pre-trial conferences and examinations.

Before joining Fullerton Beck, Stephen worked as an operations manager in the e-commerce industry. He brings more than a decade of business experience and a client-centric outlook to his legal practice. Through his education, Stephen developed a passion for litigation and alternative dispute resolution processes. Stephen is determined to provide his clients with exceptional advocacy and complete transparency at every step of the litigation process.

Stephen earned his B.A. degree from the State University of New York at Purchase (2017) and his J.D. from the Elisabeth Haub School of Law at Pace University (2020).

Stephen is admitted to practice in the state of New York.
